POSTKARTE.

Bray is a picturesque little riverside resort which has been rendered famous by the old song commemorating the exploits of the famous vicar, who, having seen some martyrs burned at Windsor, was in the habit of changing his religious professions in order to make them agree with those of the ruling sovereign. On being taxed by someone for being a turn-coat and a changeling, "Not so," said he, "for I always keep my principle, which is this—to live and die the Vicar of Bray."
